Read the text carefully then do the activities.

Sami is seventeen. Last year, he spent all his pocket money in the first week of every month, mostly on snacks and phone credit. Then he had nothing left for things he really wanted, like a new pair of football boots.

His older sister advised him to keep a small notebook. Each day, he wrote down what he spent. After a month, he was surprised: he had spent almost a third of his money on soft drinks! He decided to set a budget: 50% for his needs, 30% for his leisure and 20% for savings.

Six months later, Sami bought his boots without asking his parents for money. "If I hadn't written everything down, I would never have understood where my money went," he says.
